

My wife and I strongly oppose the Consumer Banking Association's attempts to weaken the Wisconsin No Call law. I find the claim that any telemarketer has some right to enter my home, uninvited, via a telephone line is ridiculous. Many towns and cities have Green River ordinances to restrict door-to-door sales and no call laws serve the same purpose. To assert that just because I may have been a customer of a company once does not imply that I want to do business with it again for the product I had bought or any other product it sells -- if I did, I'd call them. Wisconsin's law, which I wish was stronger, allow more than adequate time for a company to re-establish its relationship with a customer. Please reject the Consumer Banking Association's petition and leave the Wisconsin No Call law stand as is.
